DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Pawnee Rock is located in the southwest corner of Barton county, about 100 yards from the old Santa Fe trail.

The rock is today a prominence rising some 50 or 60 feet high. Originally it is said to have been twice that height and much the highest ground for miles. Matt Field, who traveled the Santa Fe trail in 1840, later wrote, "Pawnee Rock springs like a huge wart from the carpeted green of the prairie."

Traders, soldiers, emigrants, and others passing the site carved or chiseled their names into the front of the rugged mass of brown sandstone. Some of these names are still discernible among the graffiti and names of more recent visitors.

A considerable portion of the rock was removed by homesteaders to use in buildings and by the Santa Fe railroad to lay its roadbed along the route of the old trail.

Atop the rock at the present time is a memorial monument, picnic area, and a pergola, from the top of which visitors can view the Arkansas river valley and the route of the Santa Fe trail.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Pawnee Rock was for many years a place where Comanche, Kiowa, Arapahoe, Cheyenne, and Pawnee tribes held their councils of war and peace. Many Indian battles were fought nearby in the days before the white men came to Kansas.

Pawnee Rock was a landmark on the Santa Fe trail, serving as a lookout place for both white men and Indians, as well as a rendezvous and ambush for the Indians. It was a favorite camping spot for caravans bound for Santa Fe because once camped there, the rock afforded some protection against hostile Indians.

Many travelers and traders on the Santa Fe trail considered Pawnee Rock the most dangerous place on the Central Plains for encounters with the Indians.
